'The Loop' Leads to That Tired Feeling

LONDON (AP) — The intrauterine birth control device, known as "the loop" seems to lead to iron-deficiency anemia in women who use it, three British doctors said Wednesday after a survey of 219 women who use either the loop or "the pill." They wrote in the British Medical Journal that the loop increases menstrual blood loss, and "it may be permissible to conclude that after 7 to 12 months' use the majority of women are suffering from varying degrees of iron-deficiency anemia," a blood deficiency. They said the pill—the oral contraceptive—has the opposite effect of decreasing menstrual blood loss.

Holiday Fashions

FISHERMAN'S KNIT is what it's called and the effect is simple, tailored but smashing. The model at far left is Mrs. Richard Leslie of Waverly.

FLUFFY maribou feathers give this charming evening dress its dash. Any woman would love to see this under the tree Christmas morning. Mrs. Charles M. Schafer of Waverly is the model.
