HISTORIC BUSINESS

E. E. Henry ~ Photographic Artist

E. E. Henry was the third photographic artist to setup shop in Port Hope. He began his business in Port Hope about 1857, advertising himself as an "Ambrotype and Photographic Artist." His studio was located in at least three different locations, all on Walton Street. An advertisement found in The Guide on April 24, 1857 indicates he has "removed from the MAMMOTH CAR" and was newly located at the SKYLIGHT GALLERY in Robinson's building, formerly occupied by Hovey & Brand, Walton Street.

In January 1858, Henry was advertising his studio located in the Robertson Block, and in March 1858, was advertising his location in the Robinson Block. We do not know if this was a type setting error on behalf of the printer.

Henry was in Port Hope from 1857 to the early 1860s. He advertised weekly in both The Guide and The Tri-Weekly Guide. The following is taken from the January 23, 1858 advertisement, which appeared in The Guide.

MR.HENRY

Would take this method of thanking the Ladies and Gentlemen of Port Hope and vicinity for the liberal patronage they have kindly bestowed upon him, and would beg leave to inform them that he is still taking Likenesses at his Rooms, where he will be happy to see them in the execution of any of his various style of Pictures for themselves or friends. My Pictures are pronounced by good judges to be unsurpassed. Particular attention is invited to the clear and life-like expression of the eyes; the richness of tone, and especially to their Permanency. From my thorough knowledge of this wonderful Art, I would say to those who have neglected to procure their Likenesses of themselves for friends, that the present arrangement affords an excellent opportunity of securing a correct one. Copies of Pictures may be taken three or four times larger than the original without in the east injuring the sharpness, roundness or beauty. Copies taken of DAGUERREOTYPES, ENGRAVINGS, Painted Portraits, Statuary, &c., &c. – Likenesses of individuals and deceased persons taken at their residence on reasonable terms.

WALTON STREET PORT HOPE

Archivist's note: Further research has been conducted to discover where E. E. Henry went after Port Hope. Speculation is that he went to Leavenworth, Kansas, where he was one of the first photographers in the town.

If the Port Hope E. E. Henry did go to Kansas, he went on to become a very prominent photographer, working into the early twentieth century, capturing the development of Leavenworth, but also photographed historic personalities such as Buffalo Bill and the settling of the "wild west". E. E. Henry's negatives are preserved in the Amon Carter Museum as part of the Everhard Collection. The PHA will keep our members updated on any new findings.

The Port Hope Archives would like acknowledge and thank our business members for their support.

History Home E.E. Henry House

The house was built in 1871 by an Englishman named E.E. Henry. Henry was a photographer who owned a shop on Delaware Street. He took many famous photographs of Civil War generals and local photos of Leavenworth in the early days. His collection of glass-plate negatives are located in the Leavenworth County Museum. We have left the original framed prints of Henry, General Nelson Miles (taken by Henry) and a photo of the house in its original form before it was renovated and enlarged around 1900. These pictures are left in the house for renters and their visitors to enjoy. Also in the home are other historic prints of Leavenworth, a scrapbook containing information about the house and its previous owners, and a book about Leavenworth's historic homes in which our house is featured.

THE PAST SPRINGS OUT OF A PICTURE from the collection of DAVID R. PHILLIPS In the next few pages we take our readers on what we regard as a magical journey into the past. It begins at the right with one of the two frames of a stereopticon view, reproduced in its exact original size. The scene is a railway station at Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1867, and it is scarcely prepossessing. Even the planting of two girls in the foreground (an old ploy of our esteemed contemporary the National Geographic) does little for the photograph. But that is the heart of the matter. Life lurks within the picture, waiting to be released. Turn the page and see what happens when one part of it is enlarged. Then open the double fold-out and look at a detail of that enlargement spread over four of our pages. Suddenly there is no end to what can be seen; you are right there, in a suspended moment, almost jostling against the everyday life of over a century ago. Uncounted thousands of such photographs, some better, some worse, were produced all over the country in the nineteenth century, and a great many of them survive—but as prints. Only a handful of the old glassplate negatives are to be found, and they alone make possible (when they are sharp) such enlargements as these. Finding them and working with them is the fascinating avocation of David R. Phillips, of Chicago, a free-lance photographer and master darkroom technician who has assembled several excellent glass-plate collections. Using special light sources and a new breed of lenses, Phillips makes a fine art of the business of bringing to vivid life minute and unsuspected details. His searches took Phillips to Leavenworth not long ago, and there he acquired thirteen tons of plates covering the town, its people, and its events from 1855 to 1920. Most of the photographs in this treasure house of middle-western history were the product of E. E. (for Ebenezer Elijah) Henry and his stepson Harrison Putney. (Henry appears at left in the picture opposite; taken about 1867 when he was forty, together with a friend, Dr. Elbee.) They spent their lives running a photographic business in Leavenworth, Henry dying in 1917 at ninety, and Putney in 1950 at eighty-six. They witnessed the rise of a frontier post on the Missouri River into a big town that called itself, in the modest manner of the time, the Queen City of the West; it was, in fact, the largest city between St. Louis and San Francisco. They also saw it decline into a small town built around the fort and prison. But meanwhile, as their plates assert, much life had been lived in Leavenworth.

Photography Collection

The Amon Carter Museum holds one of the country's major collections of American photography. The holdings span the history of the medium, with a special emphasis given to material relating to the American West.

Historical Collections

Everhard Collection

Almost 6,000 glass-plate negatives of the American West make up this collection. Artists include E.E. Henry, John Kabel, Silas Melander, Harrison Putney, Horace Stevenson, and Richard Stevenson. These holdings also include a small group of glass-plate negatives of the 1898 Alaskan gold rush and a group of portraits documenting the African-American communities of eastern Kansas between 1875 and World War I.

The Everhard Collection is a collection of approximately 100,000 photographic negatives that span over 100 years (1864-1967) of Leavenworth's history. Mary Everhard (1887-1971) operated a photo studio in Leavenworth from 1924 to 1968. During that time, Ms. Everhard purchased and preserved the collections of several other prominent Leavenworth photographers. Her collection includes her vast archives as well as the work of E.E. Henry, Horace Stevenson and Harrison Putney. When Ms. Everhard retired in 1968, she sold her collection to Chicago photographer David R. Phillips. Over the years, the Leavenworth County Historical Society has purchased many of the negatives but Mr. Phillips still owns the copyright on other photos, too.

This collection is a permanent exhibit that combines the LCHS and Phillips Collections within Leavenworth City Hall. This exhibit showcases these exquisite photographs that constitute the Everhard Collection and paint a picture for visitors and residents of colorful history of our great River City. Some of these photos have never been seen by the public before.

The exhibit opened January 29, 2006. We welcome guests into City Hall to view the collection year-round. This collection is truly a stunning culmination of Ms. Everhard's work and her counterparts in the Leavenworth photographic community. Please join us and celebrate Leavenworth "cosmopolitan beginning."

City Hall is open from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. The building is closed all major holidays.
